recognition of less severe forms and the inclusion of patients with Ehlers-Danlos type IV (ED-IV). The diagnosis of ED-IV requires the exclusion of other types of Ehlers-Danlos syndrome. The presence of joint hypermobility is also an important diagnostic feature that is used to differentiate from other forms of Ehlers-Danlos syndrome. The increased awareness of less severe forms of the disorder, together with the absence of any specific treatment in the treatment of ED-IV, has raised concerns about the practicality of the diagnosis. In this article the diagnostic criteria for Ehlers-Danlos syndrome are discussed, and the issues surrounding the diagnosis of type IV Ehlers-Danlos syndrome are discussed.The present invention generally relates to an electric tool with a box structure, and more particularly to an electric tool with a box structure, which is provided with a locking device having a simple structure. In general, a box-shaped electric tool, such as a rotary hammer, screwdriver, or the like, includes a body, a handle, and a main switch which is provided on the body. The main switch may be turned on/off to drive the electric tool to operate, e.g., a screwing device. In general, in the electric tool, a blade is fixed to the body of the electric tool. Thus, the blade is not detachable from the body, and is fixed to the body. In general, the blade is fixed to a blade supporting portion provided at the bottom of the body, and is chucked to an anvil fixed on the body. The anvil, however, is fixed to the body of the electric tool only by means of engagement of a bolt and a nut. In this state, the body of the electric tool is fixed to a workpiece. Thus, the conventional electric tool has a disadvantage in that it is inconvenient to fix the anvil to the workpiece
