Macrocyclic Zinc Oxide Nanosheets as a Dual-Doped Matrimony to Antimicrobial and Spongy Hydroxyapatite Bone Scaffolds. Fabricating non-toxic scaffolds, which exhibit strong antimicrobial and biocompatible properties, and possessing modulated porosity, are challenging tasks. In the present study, we incorporated two antimicrobial active components (zinc oxide nanoparticles and silver nanoparticles) into the poly(vinyl alcohol) (PVA) polymer matrix to fabricate a low-cost, safe, and highly efficient matrimony-type antimicrobial composite. We prepared various zinc oxide (ZnO) and silver (Ag) doses in PVA solutions, and then fabricated high-purity ZnO and Ag nanoparticles using bovine serum albumin as a capping agent. The synthesized Ag/ZnO/PVA macrocyclic zinc oxide nanosheet was produced using a facile, scalable strategy based on self-assembly of the ZnO nanoparticles and the macrocyclic Ag/ZnO structure. The obtained Ag/ZnO/PVA nanosheet showed desirable properties such as antibacterial activity against Escherichia coli and Listeria monocytogenes, high-purity with low cytotoxicity in non-cancerous cells, and excellent spongy structure for the maintenance of extracellular matrix components. In addition, we explored its use as a dual-doped spongy hydroxyapatite (HA) bone scaffold due to its excellent osteoinductive and osteoconductive properties. The obtained composite scaffold exhibited excellent physicochemical, antibacterial, and biological properties with the ability to promote adhesion, proliferation, and differentiation of human stem cells. Therefore, the Ag/ZnO/PVA composite shows potential for future application in clinical or cosmetic fields.#!/bin/bash # This script checks that running 'cp' on a file fails.
