To establish an Internet based population based multipurpose pregnancy outcome registry with the intention to improve obstetric care by the knowledge of its real-world performance. Within the German Diabetes Association (German Diabetes Handbuch, Deutscher Diabetes-Verlag) the PREGEST (pregnancy outcome registry based on the German lifestyle trial) was established as an Internet based registry in order to obtain sufficient clinical data for evaluation and improvement of pregestational and prenatal care. In addition to routine obstetrical care data, selected data on maternal and fetal complications and perinatal events are to be documented. In the first year, 10,000 women were participating and 1,936 pregnancies are documented with total delivery rates of 1,275 (64.5%). The number of participating centres have increased from the beginning to the end of this period. Since 2001, data on diabetes mellitus have been documented in all participating centres. This population based registry will provide useful information for evaluation and improvement of prenatal and obstetrical care by the knowledge of real-world outcomes. In addition, the present study will give the opportunity to further evaluate the risk factors of pregnancy complications, especially in women with diabetes mellitus.Q: Which API to choose for loading images (PNG, JPEG, GIF, BMP) efficiently on iOS? Which API to choose for loading images (PNG, JPEG, GIF, BMP) efficiently on iOS? A: The most efficient way to load a file is to use NSData. For bitmap images, you'll want UIImage. A: I wrote this last week; you'll also want to use the GPUImage framework (which provides the ability to process bitmaps with the GPU) A: In my experience, UIImage takes the longest to load and don't get the frame image. I ended up having to use an AFNetworking subclass called AFImageResponseSerializer. I needed it to be able to process multiple image requests
