IconCool Studio 8.20 Build 140222Â .Q: Does ISO have to change for different subjects? Sorry for the title, but I am not sure how to explain it in a better way. Does my ISO need to change for different subjects? (yoga, photography, etc.) Or is there no need to change it? If the need is different, what is the reasonable amount of the light needed? I am still a beginner, so I am not sure if I understand everything correctly. A: From: There is no need to change your ISO for a certain lighting condition. However, your exposure time will depend on the ISO setting you have chosen. A higher ISO will reduce the number of light units it takes to expose an image. To use a lower ISO (and therefore, shorter exposure), you will need more light. A rule of thumb is: use ISO 200 for sunny day light photography, ISO 400 for indoor rooms, and ISO 800 or even higher for night photography. You'll get a cleaner image with a lower ISO for longer exposure times (bigger light requirement). A higher ISO will give you cleaner image, faster due to less read time, with smaller light requirement (shorter exposure time). It comes down to personal preference. You're 3e33713323
