Executive Chairman of the Board of Directors of Russian Air Transport Company Igor Sablin commented on the situation in Tatarstan and Crimea as well as the growth prospects of the airline industry in the coming years. Mr Sablin said the Russian aircraft fleet is already in good condition and has a good life cycle. The carrier now has no reason to lease aircraft. Its goal for 2016 is to renew its fleet of passenger planes, but not all will be bought. "In some cases it will be rented, and in some cases leased. We do not plan to buy new aircraft, we do not plan to add them to the fleet, and if we want to rent, we will rent. We do not want to wait for something untimely to happen with regard to leasing aircraft. We have no issues with leasing them." Sablin also said that the main task of the airline is to earn more money, but not to make a profit. "We are a pure-play." "We have a very large international network. No one starts an airline, but we have an International network. This type of airline is a global niche, which is growing. The key task is not only to earn money, but also to develop routes which have the potential to be sold, not only to earn money. We want to make the maximum money possible from existing routes, and to earn more than we earn on each plane. But we are not in the business of making a profit on a route. We are a pure-play." "The main reason our aircraft are in such good condition is that we have an operational base. We are not an airline that leases planes and then puts them in storage. We have a strong base of operations in Siberia and Central Russia. If we lease our aircraft to any of our customers, we do it only from outside Russia. We have a good base of operations in Central Russia and Siberia, and we do not need to lease our aircraft to anyone. We can return them to the base, because we know what planes we need and where they should be stationed. We are happy with our fleet in particular, because we know we are not leasing them." Sablin added that he expects the airline to continue expanding by adding destinations. "We have several ideas, and there is no doubt that the airline industry in Central Russia and Siberia has many new growth points and new opportunities." "That's why we will start to work on the new routes. We are looking at many new routes. The main thing is the network, because

The original image is shown in the first example. The image can be a collage or you can add shadows, reflections and other textures manually. You can arrange the layers in Photoshop to create a watch with a special finish or to have several watches in one image.
