The infectivity of the hepatitis C virus (HCV) depends on the interaction of a virus-like particle (VLP) with the host cell, which is mediated by the expression of certain structural proteins encoded in the viral polyprotein. In this study, we have analysed the capacity of VLPs derived from HCV genotypes 1 and 2 to express the structural proteins core, E1, E2 and NS3. Although VLPs containing all of these structural proteins were formed in human hepatoma cells, differences in expression of the individual proteins could be observed depending on the HCV genotype. VLPs containing NS5 were abundantly produced by cells infected with HCV genotype 1. In contrast, in genotype 2 infected cells only core, E2 and NS3 were detected. In addition, we could demonstrate that E2 and NS3 contained in the VLPs derived from genotype 1 can be cleaved by cellular proteases, suggesting that this interaction is of relevance in vivo. These results further clarify the interactions of the different HCV genotypes with the host cell, which may play a role in the pathogenicity of the virus. What's the difference between the light skin of a Ravi Shankar and a dark skinned Ravi Shankar? Like many in the classical world, Ravi Shankar—a cholera survivor from India—was away from the scenes of history for most of his childhood.
