#1. Photoshop has Power Filters Power Filters do exactly what their name implies - they take power! This feature allows you to filter an image with artistic effects, like a blurring of the edges of the filter. You can also use the Gradient Filter to create a gradient effect. The Gradient Filter makes it easy to create a color gradient in an image, thereby turning it into a different picture altogether. Make sure to use a Background Layer for your Gradient Filter settings. To add a border to the image (slightly blurred edges), apply a Gaussian blur filter. #2. Photoshop has Advanced Editing Adobe Photoshop has a lot to offer. For example, with the Adobe Content Exchange (ACE) and the Adobe Stock you can add stock photography to your creations. The Advanced Content-Aware Fill (ACAF) feature can remove objects from your images. ACAF works by searching for blobs of pixels, and then uses these to fill the image. #3. Photoshop has RGB-HexaMixer RGB-HexaMixer can be used to create color shifts. You can use this tool to make a website's background a more vivid color, or use it to create fake color or sepia. The HSB program is used to measure colors, where HSB stands for hue, saturation, and brightness. #4. Photoshop has Blur The Blur feature in Adobe Photoshop allows you to blur the background. This is useful in many cases, such as removing logos or other objects that you don't want in your final image. To blur, you select the background of the picture you want to blur. Simply set a blur amount, and then select "OK." If you want to blur an entire object, use a bucket of paint to select the edges and, with the blur tool, blur them out. #5. Photoshop has Layer Masks This tool is one of the most versatile features in Photoshop. Although Layer Masks are often associated with transparencies, you can use them in many ways. You can use Layer Masks to fine-tune the layering process in Photoshop. When you create a mask, a solid object is assigned to the mask as a transparency. A translucent (or transparent) object can be assigned to the mask and, when you highlight the mask
