Clinical relevance of genetic variants in androgen and estrogen metabolism genes in prostate cancer: a systematic review and meta-analysis. In the past few years, several studies have explored the clinical relevance of genetic variants in androgen and estrogen metabolism genes in prostate cancer: (PCa), which may predict the tumor's clinical outcome. However, the reported genetic associations with clinical outcomes are still controversial and inconclusive. Thus, we performed a systematic review and meta-analysis of studies to provide a quantitative estimate of the relevant associations. We searched PubMed and the Cochrane Library from their inception to May 1, 2016. Our search was based on a set of detailed search terms. We extracted data from the included studies using a standardized data extraction form. Using a random-effect model, pooled odds ratios (ORs) and 95% confidence intervals (CIs) were calculated for each polymorphism. Sensitivity analysis, cumulative meta-analysis, and publication bias analysis were performed to evaluate the heterogeneity and potential bias. Finally, we summarized the evidence quality according to the GRADE approach. A total of 31 studies (11,889 cases and 10,820 controls) were included in this meta-analysis. Overall, no significant differences were observed in the comparisons of homozygous mutant genotypes and recessive genotypes of CYP19A1 (TT vs CC: OR = 0.94; 95% CI = 0.74-1.19; TT vs CC/CT: OR = 0.99; 95% CI = 0.87-1.13), ESR1 (TA/AA: OR = 1.02; 95
