Communication devices provide a wide range of communication services and features to users. Cellular telephones and other mobile devices, personal digital assistants, and personal computer users, for example, have access to a multitude of communication services that have become increasingly more complex and integrated with a variety of applications. One service that has experienced significant growth in recent years is the availability of short message service (SMS) messaging. As its name implies, SMS messages are typically short text messages that a user is able to send to another user's telephone, mobile device, or personal computer for delivery to the SMS-receiving device. In addition to the drawbacks that may be associated with SMS, a user is also inconvenienced by the response time associated with email. The response time for email is not significantly faster than that associated with SMS. As a result, emails that are sent as "Quick Response" (QR) codes may take days or weeks to return the
