We demonstrate a new atomic force microscopy technique that allows direct imaging of a positive photoresist film on a flat metal surface. By measuring the interatomic distances between regions of the photoresist that are chemically bonded to the metal, and comparing these to the interatomic distances between the same regions of the resist that are not chemically bonded to the metal, it is possible to triangulate the three-dimensional profile of a photoresist film on a flat metal surface. The technique enables direct imaging of a resist film at nanometer resolution.Q: Calculate value from combination of values I have a Class called Animal public class Animal{ private String type; public enum Class{ Bird,Cat,Dog} } I have an array of type Animal with numbers 0 to 3 in it.
