USE COUPON CODE: BFGDREAMS This invention relates to an alloy system which is resistant to oxidation and corrosion, and which is used in various applications, including oxygen steel, gas turbine and stationary combustor applications; and more particularly, the invention relates to such an alloy which is particularly suitable for such applications in the form of a reaction bonded blade root with a unique alloy coating. A variety of alloys and chemical systems have been proposed for protection against oxidation and corrosion. In the turbine and gas turbine engine, the metal parts require a special alloy combination which is both resistant to high temperature oxidation and corrosive attack by high temperature gas and steam. One class of such alloys comprises oxides stabilized by elements such as aluminum, zirconium or zirconium and yttrium. In addition to the above, other elements, such as chromium, hafnium and manganese, have been used to yield alloys suitable for these applications. Another approach for providing protection from attack by high temperature oxidizing and corrosive environments involves coating the article in question with a protective coating, such as an alumina coating. Such coatings as porous alumina coatings can protect the substrate material from high temperature oxidation and corrosive attack. However, such coatings must be applied in a single continuous process. Yet another approach to providing protection against oxidation and corrosive attack is to form the article from an alloy containing alloying elements and impurities which yield bff6bb2d33
