We wish you all a happy and healthy new year. Oh, sorry I've been absent since December! I've been in intensive training to complete my Japanese exam for the college entrance exam. If you read my post about the royal Battle, it seems I was recently flying around in the city of Osaka. I've been living in this city for about two weeks right now. However, I've just now completed the first test and now I'll move to the second one. To be honest, the city of Osaka is a bit depressing at night, and I hate traveling around in the dark alone, so I think that this city is tough to settle for a teenager with no family. I can't really communicate with local people because I'm afraid to make a mistake, so I'm spending most of my time alone. However, I had a great time with my new classmates, so I'll be fine. I'm spending most of my time in the library studying for the tests, but I've just now finished The Gate of Babylon. I'll play one of the games on my tablet (the game I've finished was on my home computer...) and start reading it on the train, so I think I'll be able to finish the book soon. After school, I'm going to spend more time meeting new people and playing games, so I'll definitely be busy after that. Still, I hope everyone has a great start to this year! I'll answer your questions from my account soon, so please stay tuned! Update On Etna Etna is 12 years old, and now he's starting his high school life. >Really? It's hot outside right now
