resource by all providers by 2010."
Labour's shadow Health minister Kate Green said: "This is a great opportunity for the NHS to demonstrate it can be trusted to meet its targets of improving health for all." The plan includes: up to 12,500 extra children's intensive care bed days for under-fives more operation theatres and better-trained staff to treat elderly patients new special care baby units in some hospitals more money to support hundreds of projects to improve health in the community and the NHS's own patient-care facilities more doctors working part-time, and more ambulances and support staff to relieve them e-learning to help doctors and nurses cope with the 21st Century improving and extending the opening hours of GP surgeries improving the quality of care in hospitals But it also has some fairly blunt language:
