Galaxy Union Features Key:

Match the creature 1-3 moves from the pile on the screen or hit the "reset" button.

If you make a strike that pushes the creature to the bottom, it will drop its five cards, and you will have a 10-0 win.

If you capture the creature, you will be able to play another card that can make a strike on that creature.

Pure Wargaming

- Do you really love playing card games?
- But you don't like playing with a huge amount of money that the pile of cards represent?

No problem! You can just keep your money on your phone and transfer it to a digital counter.

And if you want to play for fun and try your skills, you will just need to make a counter on your device that will be opposed for you, like in a card game.

IDEA IS A MYTH! The mission was simple. Supplies needed to get to the miners far below; every drop of fuel mattered. Unfortunately, the world wasn't cooperating. Exploring one of the deepest caverns ever discovered, the crew had to make split-second decisions that would ripple through time and space. If the mission failed, the world would end. Out of fuel. Out of options. One last plan. We've all seen it done in books, movies, and video games. But it's even scarier when the threat is real. This PlayStation®VR title is an adventure game where every detail and design choice matters. No one can do it better than Crystal Dynamics. Spin the wheel and you will be stuck in a different time and place. Q: Do all Electorate II powers grant a new roll to all members of that party? Electorate II says: At the start of a round, any member of the party who has an Electorate II ability can reroll all of the dice for that ability. When the rules don't state something explicitly, is the ruling ambiguous? Is it possible that rerolling dice can only occur once per round for all Electorate II abilities in a party? A: Basically, if it doesn't say otherwise, it's always a one-time per-round reroll of all dice for the ability. There are, very roughly, two ways a GM could run this: Decide per-round that everyone gets one reroll, or Decide per-ability that rerolls exist as the mechanic for a power, and give each power its own rerolls for all members of the party. The first approach is basically what's expected; the second is in-character on one side, and handling rerolls as a mechanical convenience of a power on the other side. Which is better? Well, it depends on the campaign. If the GM characterizes characters as having free rerolls, and one roll never affects the game in any way, but the other approach—moving rerolls out as an additional feature of the power—seems weaker than it really is, it's probably better to go with the approach that allows fewer rerolls, regardless of the in-world reasons for it. If the GM characterizes characters as having little or no chance to get rerolls, and one roll never affects the game in any way, but the second approach—"per ability"—seems weaker than it really is, it's probably better to go with the approach that gives each ability its own rerolls. That's a small rule change, and probably not what you were looking for, but there's nothing that makes one approach better than the other. Monoclonal antibodies against the COOH-terminal flagellin of Salmonella enterica serovar Paratyphi A strain RKS4550. The process of antigenic variation of Salmonella enterica serovar Paratyphi A (ST) requires a system of proteins called the two-part spacer (Tsp) system in which only one of the genes encodes a flagellin, whereas the others encode proteins that form a functional polypeptide chain. In this work, we describe the generation of specific monoclonal antibodies (MAbs) against the COOH-terminal flagellin (FlaB) of a ST strain and their potential use for the study of the structure of its antigen. Two groups of MAbs were used in this work: MAb c-FlaB and MAb transc-FlaB. MAb c-FlaB were obtained by using FlaB recombinant protein as immunogen and allotypic specificity MAb transc-FlaB, using the monoclonal antibodies E39 and STI G7 specific for E. coli flagella protein FliC, which becomes incorporated to the COOH-terminal region of S. enterica flagella. The location of each of them was determined by immunoblotting and the degree of homology of their epitopes was assessed by ELISA. These monoclonal antibodies were able to recognize the recombinant FlaB protein which has previously been shown to be immunogenic in humans and formed by a different antigenic determinant than that formed by the flagella of the ST strain. In addition, the four monoclonal antibodies determined similar epitopes among all the proteins encoded by the spacer gene cluster of the ST strain.
