I am a student and would love to take part in the T'ai Chi classes, but unfortunately, Cape Town is almost the end of the world for me as I have no hope of getting here. I didn't check in here for a long time and seeing your new thread'stirrin' I feel I must express myself... You get the impression that Western'science' is more 'trustworthy' than Indian or Chinese ways of understanding the human being. You get the impression that the whole western approach is just'so much better' than other traditional methods. While I do take a lot of what I learned in med school from India, I don't accept that at all. My point is: Chinese medicine has been around for so long that it has preserved the wisdom of this whole life process; it took the major medical schools of China much longer than that of India to understand or value anything but Western teaching. Now don't get me wrong: I don't
