Overview Metallophobia Cracked Version is a top-down action roguelike shooter set in a dystopian future. You play as a robot, attempting to complete missions and eventually rebel against the evil robots that have taken over the world. Each playthrough is a new procedurally generated map, with unique designs and challenges. Update your robot as you progress, and create a unique build - the combination of your weapons and modules. There are currently three playable classes. Each robot has unique abilities and weaknesses, making the strategy of getting out of danger to upgrade and create your best combination to survive the mission. Weapon Upgrades Each weapon has a number of upgrades that allow you to customize your loadout. Wipe your enemies down with a barrage of firepower and shoot down incoming enemies with the powerful Minigun. Module Upgrades Another available upgrade is to the robot's modules. These small, robotic components let you extend your abilities to increase your survivability and defeat enemies, make you a boss in your own right, or a deadly trap. Gun Power The default class is the Assault class. The increased range and weight of the MAVGASP is helpful to keep your enemies at bay. The MAVGASP has high reload speed, and very low fire rate. You should avoid the MAVGASP when firing, and always run from it. It can also be used in cover to make a good stopping spot. Your fast pistol is useful to run and gun from cover, but is not as effective against enemies up close. The FANG is deadly when placed on fire, but it is slow and has a lower rate of fire than the other weapons. The MAVGASP has higher damage output, but is hard to aim accurately. You should use it carefully and try to find a spot that will allow you to wipe out enemies quickly and get out of danger. Seen on the right, and hidden in the lower left corner of the picture. Grenades have high damage, but they do minimal damage and cannot be re-fired. They are best used to open up cover for you to escape or to take out an enemy sneaking close on you. Overall, the default gun is useful against most enemies, but the MAVGASP is essential to beat bosses and survive close to other enemies. Metallophobia 2022 Crack begins with a rather simple tutorial. Metallophobia is a form of metal phobia characterized by exaggerated fears and anxious response to the presence of, or association with, metals. Compounding this, metal phobia is usually linked to difficulties faced with proper disposal of useless or unwanted metallic materials. Generally, metalophobia is the fear of arbitrary metals (such as "tin cans", acupuncture needles, battery acid, batteries, brass, etc.) and is not metal phobia related to real metallic materials such as gold or steel. Despite the lack of proper medical advice and cure, many anti-social people become anorexic, withdrawn, irritable or mentally unbalanced. Such individuals seem to have a generalised dislike of simply existing in the same space as alloys and metals. Controversially, many people have gone as far as to say that if somebody has a fear of all metals that they have no fear of metal, and that metalophobia is a form of paranoia with its own meaning. However, true mental health professionals do not consider this claim that common aluminum foil is classified as a metal in psychiatric diagnosis to be correct. Signs of metalophobia Sympathetic character disorder A common symptom of metalophobia is what is known as Sociopathic or Sympathetic Character Disorder, commonly referred to simply as "The Jakke". Described as an anti-social character including a distaste for social and professional advancement, the Metalakke often finds social interactions to be overwhelming and parasitic, while exhibiting the above-mentioned psychopathy of metalophobia. A characteristic result is a disregard for social hierarchies and a disregard for subjective or outside opinions of others (especially authority figures), specifically in the workplace setting. The Metalakke often faces personal growth and material difficulties beyond unbalancing all aspects of their life, including the inability to properly manage their fears of "unpleasant materials". Other associated psychiatric disorders include OCD and Anxiety disorders. However, while these may serve to reinforce the idea of metalophobia as a neurobiological disorder ("Genes vs. Nature", mainly known as "Nature versus Nurture"), most Metalakk who are treated medically are instead deemed to have a distorted sense of reality and are thus diagnosed with psychosomatic disorders. The Metalakk often suffer from other psychiatric disease such as schizophrenia, major depressive disorder or bipolar disorder. Metalakk are also characterized by what many call the "Panic of the Metalakke" where they have panic attacks focused on the presence of
