The impact of a civil society-generated formative evaluation on the way the nutritional programme is being implemented and evolving. This paper explores the impact of a formative evaluation (FV) in a charity aiming to improve the way a school nutrition programme is implemented, and discusses what that impact has been in terms of improving the nutrition education material. Also, it provides an account of the range of projects the charity has taken on and the future work it sees for itself. This exploratory study gathered data on the charity's activities and explored the questions of whether the FV improved the nutrition programme and, if it did, how. An adapted mixed method design was used, with in-depth interviews with programme staff and management, focus groups with key stakeholders, and an online survey distributed to participating children. Data were collected during the first four years of the FV. Qualitative data were analysed using thematic analysis and quantitative data using descriptive analysis. Qualitative interviews and focus groups confirmed that the FV improved learning objectives, experiences and outcomes. Quantitative survey data revealed that FV was a positive experience for all participants. There was almost complete agreement that the FV improved the nutrition education material presented to children and it improved children's knowledge of food and nutrition (PDo you feel like racing for the beach without leaving the house? You can keep your brain from slipping away by getting the right workout, like this simple session of sprinting. Q: Xslt 2.0: using get-content with the reval function When trying to get the contents of a URL using the get-content function in xslt, I always get a null-value. I've looked up for posts of people with the same problem, and I guess I'm not the only one. I'm sure this is a fairly easy to solve, but I'm having difficulty finding an answer. Using XSLT 2.0 and Saxon 9.8. My xslt looks like this: `</xsl:text>` I can get the xpath to work if I remove the get-content part. The only way I've been able to get the value to load is by adding the get-content inside a function and return the value. My questions are: Is this the correct way to do this? Why does get-content() return a null-value instead of the value of the input? Thank you in advance. A: The same problem appears here in a similar question: XSLT 2.0: Is the XPath get-content() is always returning NULL I'm not sure if a solution is discussed in this question, but according to the accepted answer and posted comments, the issue has been resolved in Saxon 9.8. If I'm not wrong, it seems that in Saxon 9.8, get-content() is working as it should, while in Saxon 9.6 get-content() was not working as expected. The following links may be helpful:
