Senate Finance Committee Chairman Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa, says the nation's top health officials are effectively working for a pharmaceutical company, and they should have been brought before the committee to testify about the industry's impact on the nation's health. The Trump administration this week also released a rule that would require drug companies to spend at least 80 percent of the money they spend to promote their drugs on actual drug research. PHARMACEUTICAL COMPANIES TO REQUIRE 80 PERCENT OF MONEY SPENT ON ADVERTISING TO BE ON RESEARCH "It's hard to believe that the top medical folks are now working for the drug industry. I think they should come before the committee," Grassley told Fox News when asked about the report, which included recommendations on making the drug industry more accountable. "I'm concerned about the industry's influence on the public health, so I'd be happy to have them testify under oath," he said, adding that it has been shown that people who are hesitant to use treatments for fear of side effects or cost can lead to worse outcomes. But during a hearing before the Senate Finance Committee on Wednesday, FDA Commissioner Scott Gottlieb said that while he understands what Grassley is saying about the industry's influence, he doesn't know where he would hold such a hearing. RUSH LIMBAUGH, FAMILY & CORPORATE DONORS TO BACK ANTI-TESTING "If I were just starting today as a commissioner, I would certainly be interested in having such a hearing," Gottlieb said, noting that he supported in the past efforts to hold hearings. "I am pleased the committee put some resources behind this, but it's not something I would have been interested in doing on my own," he added. "I think that would probably be best done by the Bureau of Consumer Protection." But Republican Sen. Mike Rounds of South Dakota added that he would be interested in hearing from Gottlieb and Health and Human Services Secretary Alex Azar, but only "if we are ready for it." "I don't think we are, and if I'm wrong about that, maybe I'm wrong," Rounds told Fox News. The issue of doctors
