The fundamentals of image editing. Although it may seem simplistic, Photoshop is remarkably easy to use. The software does most of the work for you. Edgy picture manipulation. This is where Photoshop is most widely used. With advanced color-manipulation tools, users can transform ordinary pictures into real works of art. Aspects of the Basic Interface There are some key components of the Photoshop interface that make a difference between a successful artist and a novice user. The left side of the interface contains the following controls: Work area. The area from which you make selections. In this view, the work area is either as large as the currently displayed image (for a single window or document) or as large as the document that you are working on (for more than one window). Toolbox. This is the dock where you see the Photoshop tools (boxes) and panels (rectangles) of Photoshop. You can add panels to the toolbox by dragging them into place. You can see and organize the main tools by clicking the main menu tool on the workspace. You can also click the small tool icon in the toolbox, and then click the Tools panel of your choice in the workspace.

---

---

Palettes. These are the boxes that hold image adjustment and color-correction controls. You can adjust the way the image is displayed using the Adjust/Levels and Shadows/Highlights toolboxes or by using the Adjust Color/Levels, Adjust Color/Curves, and Adjust Color/Curves dialog boxes. You can also make selections using the Magic Wand and Polygonal Lasso tools or the brush tools. You can find details on these controls in the upcoming sections. Tool bar. To the right of the workspace is a tool bar that acts as a shortcut to the tools that you use most often. To access it, click the Tool

Options icon on the workspace to see a pop-up menu where you can click Edit, or one of the other tools, such as Flatten Image. The Library. This window is where you find the image assets that you have loaded into Photoshop. It resembles a stack of CD-ROMs; the most Every once in a while something happens that changes the world. An invention. A discovery. A paradigm shift. During these times, it becomes painfully obvious how small the human brain is compared to all of the machinery and resources it takes to make our lives simpler, more efficient, and more enjoyable. As with many aspects of our lives, we are limited to having to do this because we are only human. We are all humans and have limits to how much we can take in. What makes us different from one another, is that we want to take in more and more information than is natural for us as a human. We want to know more and more and we want to know it quickly. We want to retain it permanently. We want it to be useful to us. This is why we studied more and more and tried to learn what we could take in, and retain as much of it as we could. What we weren't limited to was to use as much of it as we could to create pictures, stories, and events in our minds that we could pass on to others in order to share the ideas. We wanted to make sure they could see as well as we did. We wanted to make it tangible for them in order for them to understand how we felt about what we did. We wanted them to feel as if they were there with us. When we no longer were able to show them what we were doing, we had to return to the way things were. It's 2017 now and we no longer can make sense of much, if any, of what we are seeing. We can't share and share our knowledge like we used to. The internet is literally at the forefront of our lives now. It gives us real time access to everything and anything we could imagine. It's made us think that if it can be typed it must be real. There is some truth to this, but it's incomplete. While we can see and hear and even touch and taste something online, it's still not real to us. We don't "hear" it or really "feel" it

---

---

---

---

when we watch a movie.
There's a disconnect between what we are seeing and hearing and what we are creating in our mind's eye.
We're not fooling anybody.
It's why reality TV system has encouraged us to do just that, forcing us to plow through heady sciences. This month, TIME ranks the 50 greatest inventions of all time. It would be great if we included in the list an animal that taught us to understand how all things worked.”
