Carbohydrate Measurements in Juvenile Idiopathic Arthritis and the Relationship with Disease Activity. To explore the possible associations between the four major blood markers of carbohydrate metabolism (glucose, insulin, C-peptide and glycated haemoglobin [HbA1c]) and three clinical markers of juvenile idiopathic arthritis (JIA) activity, disease activity score in 28 joints (DAS28) and percentage of swollen and tender joints (PtGA) and pain (visual analogue scale; VAS), and to analyse the possible differences between JIA subtypes. We examined 100 adolescents, ages 14-18 years, with newly diagnosed JIA. For each patient we recorded the DAS28, PtGA, VAS and the standard blood analyses, including carbohydrate measurements. The mean

(SEM) age at baseline was 15.2 (0.4) years, and the median age of onset of JIA was 15 years. Seven patients had oligoarthritis, 31 polyarthritis and 62 enthesitis-related arthritis (ERA). DAS28
