Viscoplex (10-530) Active Ingredient: Bisphenol A"We thought it was more of a team-building exercise," Smyth said, "to see them thinking they were going in the right direction, thinking we were in the right direction. It's better to fail early." In camp, he found out it was even more important to fail right. The Jets ended up, as Smyth expected, in the final. Which teams will impress in camp this week? Which teams will lose in camp this week? Sign up for NHL Face-Off, our weekly fantasy hockey newsletter Casperi showed early a willingness to play on the fourth line with good-to-great energy and strong puck pursuit. But he missed assignments on much bigger rushes. His legs were raw. He was a bit limited in the speed department. He spent a few shifts that sent the puck past the net just for starters. His decision making was a bit erratic. "He's come back and is playing hockey where he should be playing hockey at this time of the year," Jets coach Paul Maurice said. DeAngelo paid the price when he was a healthy scratch. DeAngelo played his first game in the NHL this past season, and he showed promise. He was tough in the face-off circle, he won a lot of puck battles, and he exhibited a strong stick. But he was unable to make a contribution offensively with the aid of some bad luck on the power play. Cassaday was generally better in practice with the puck than without it. He displayed the poise to hang in the offensive zone, the vision to find open areas and the awareness to create something out of nothing with the puck. He took the face-off dot at a good rate. He was a threat on the power play. Bouchard was part of a first unit that had a lot of good moments. He was among the easiest skaters to spot, always in position and doing the right things, whether it was playing the puck through neutral ice or making a pass. But he got away with a lot. He took a few questionable plays off and sometimes tried to do too much. He missed a power play. He took a total of three
