 AÂ 1Â .Q: Is it a good idea to use external libraries to speed up desktop applications? To make desktop applications a bit faster, I was planning to use OGL-ES, SVG, and/or OpenGL. Is it a good idea to use external libraries or not? Also, will this have an effect on the memory consumption? A: You are better off using functionality provided by your platform. For instance: On a Linux desktop you can use GTK and GLib, which are part of the platform, and people who are programming for GNOME OS are already doing that. On Windows, the API will be straightforward to use (there is even a Linux port of GdkgLExt). On OS X, the Cocoa Gt+/Cocoa GLib is even being improved to provide better support for OpenGL, more efficient code paths (department of such knowledge resides in Mac OS X team), and better APIs than Gd+. In general, there are certain APIs that are not part of the platform and they do not provide the same quality code paths as the platform-provided versions. These APIs may be no slower, but it will not be as performant. So it is always up to you to decide whether you want to use platform-specific APIs or code-specific libraries. As for your question, using GL or SVG directly will not affect the Transient cytopenias: an unusual manifestation of human herpesvirus 6 encephalitis in an immunocompetent patient. Human herpesvirus 6 (HHV-6) is a neurotropic virus that causes a variety of infections in humans. Although HHV-6 can cause a variety of clinical syndromes, including asymptomatic infection in healthy individuals, acute febrile illness, retinitis, and serious, potentially fatal, neurological complications (eg, encephalitis), these infections are usually associated with immune suppression. We report the case of a 26-year-old man with no predisposing factors who developed an unusual, transient, cytopenia, mainly anemia, coinciding with a first episode of HHV-6 encephalitis. This report adds to the limited knowledge on the pathogenesis of transient cytopenias, suggesting, for the first time, the involvement of the hematopoietic stem cells.
