Solvusoft FileViewPro 2013 is the best choice for portable viewing programs for Mac OS X.Newt Gingrich at a rally in Dallas on March 10, 2012, two days before Super Tuesday. His campaign won four states and he stayed in the race. REUTERS/Jessica Rinaldi NEW YORK (Reuters) - Newt Gingrich's presidential campaign said on Monday it secured enough delegates in yesterday's primary elections in South Carolina and Colorado to win the nomination, and his strength in the conservative state of Alabama has raised the prospect that he could go the distance. The former House speaker failed to win enough votes to take the lead in national opinion polls, and he has not indicated he would drop out. However, in South Carolina, where the first Southern primary was held on Saturday, Gingrich won a majority of the delegates to the party convention in Tampa in August, the campaign said. Gingrich said he was "fired up, energized and ready to go" after his victory in South Carolina, which yields 41 delegates. "Americans are fed up with a President who seems to be on a permanent vacation," he said. For one of the few times during the campaign, Gingrich's supporters pointed to polls to make their case for him. Gingrich, who rarely cites public opinion polls in his stump speeches, has slipped from third place in most polls in the last month. In Alabama, where Gingrich won a majority of the delegates, a USC Dornsife/LA Times poll published on Sunday showed him in second place with 24 percent, a turnaround from last month when it had him at 13 percent. Even when Senator John McCain, the Republican presidential nominee in 2008, won in Alabama in 2008, he fell short of the majority needed to claim the majority of delegates, which is likely now Gingrich's best hope.
