We also wanted to find a realistic representation of the light turning on and off in a stadium. The solution we came up with is thanks to a great part of our development team who has their own spare time – creating movies and programming, but most of all, spending hours in front of a cinema screen. The Neon I was originally against using the Neon light, because we wanted to have the game's atmosphere in line with the Real Madrid and Barcelona stadiums. However, we decided to add it anyway, because of the gameplay benefits. The light in the stadium was originally going to be on a timer, which would trigger at the beginning of the match. We weren't sure whether we should use a game engine or a real-time lighting solution. Game engine If we used a game engine, we could easily light the stadium by adjusting the emission color of a light. In comparison, a real-time lighting solution would need to be able to adjust the intensity and frequency with which it would turn on. Problems we encountered The problem was that we could not get the lighting to work the way we wanted. So, we tried another solution. This solution involved us using a high-speed camera to photograph the light bulbs of the stadium as a lighting system. We photographed the stadium during the game. Then, with the help of a photogrammetric technique, we reconstructed what we took. So we could use the light bulbs to recreate a lighting system inside the stadium. An in-game control of the lights A test is under way, where the Neon light will be turned off and on in real-time. As a result of the test, we will be able to determine whether real-time lighting is viable. The Epics The first episode of the game is the UEFA Champions League 2014-15, where new features are featured. With around 2460 match events, we've implemented a 4K rendering solution. We created certain content to give the player an authentic and full UEFA Champions League experience. We're not done yet. When we add new features, we'll be adding new support for it – not just a technical solution but a "feature" solution. We want to keep our number one goal in mind: the player. That's why we have 12 clubs, with 20 national teams, real stadiums and new faces on the
