OPTIMIZED ACTION COMBAT SYSTEM All the action in THE ELDEN RING occurs with a real-time action combat system. Unlike typical RPG games, the battle system in THE ELDEN RING is a combination of the turn-based, real-time, and anime-style systems, which allows you to enjoy the ease of the turn-based combat while maintaining the excitement of the real-time and action parts. Real-time Action Combat Unlike any other turn-based RPG game, in real-time action games the game continues to progress even when you take your turn. The battle system of THE ELDEN RING is a real-time action system, which is a combination of turn-based and real-time battle systems. Turn-Based Combat When you attack, you cannot see the enemy's attack. Thus, you can imagine what an enemy character will do and accurately respond to its movements. Real-Time Battle System After giving your order, you can control your character to hit the enemy. Real-time action is achieved by matching the timing of both the attacker and the defender with their respective abilities. SAN FRANCISCO — Lawyers for the family of Stephon Clark, a 25-year-old unarmed black man killed by police in Sacramento this month, say the “disturbing” officer’s bodycam footage shows a “murder” and calls for criminal charges. Clark’s death, captured on the bodycam of Officer Devin Rojas, was ruled a homicide Thursday by the Sacramento County District Attorney’s Office. The footage shows Rojas, who is white, firing a series of rounds at Clark as he held up his hands. Rojas fired multiple rounds at Clark’s back as Clark moved away from the officer, the district attorney said in a statement. Rojas was responding to reports of a “person breaking car windows” in the city’s Fillmore neighborhood on March 18. The family of Stephon Clark says its ‘immensely disappointed’ by the decision not to charge the Sacramento police officer who killed the unarmed black man, and says the video shows a “murder” while Rojas insists he fired in self-defense and it was a “tragedy.” (Feb. 9) District Attorney Anne Marie Schubert announced Thursday that the officer was not facing charges. The Sacramento Police Department says it also will not file any criminal charges against Rojas. “The police department and DA reviewed all of the evidence in this case – including the body cam video – to reach this decision,” the department said in a statement Friday. “They don’t know what might have happened had Officer Rojas not shot Stephon Clark, or what might have happened if the video had been different, but they reached a decision.” The district attorney also concluded that the shooting was not in violation of the department’s use of force protocol, according to her statement. The Clark family’s lawyer, Michael J. Hestrin, had earlier said the footage proved the officer broke the department’s use-of-force policy. “The district attorney’s decision makes clear that no reasonable officer would have thought he had a lawful right to kill an innocent man, and that his actions were in violation of the law,” Hestrin said in a statement Thursday. “This is a tragedy of colossal proportions and an immensely disturbing use of deadly force against a vulnerable person. The videos show that he was murdered. As a human, it’s really painful to see.” “The most
