For all of you who feel sorry for yourself (and I certainly do feel sorry for myself as well, as a disabled person) you will be happy to know that a new website is here to help. The website is called www.utility.com.au and it's designed to help you deal with the pain of mental and emotional disability. The site is very much the brainchild of a fellow disability sufferer who has a sense of humour to boot. Below are a few of the website's more general features: It has information, which you can search by: Theme Rank Age Issues Keywords Topics Goals Capacity Medium Authors Language Tools Agency Source Mentions Personalities Plans Video Partners The different options you have are limited, including subcategories (as if that would make a difference), default searches, and the ability to bookmark your own search. A search engine? In a disabled user-friendly website? Sounds like a dream. The site's overall layout is pretty good, and the fact that the design isn't pretentious or overwhelming is a definite plus. The site has two main sections. 1cdb3666d
