Paradigm Blast is a short, silly, couch party game made with Cards Against Humanity where three teams of three players attempt to blow their friends up. Cards Against Humanity is a party game for when things go wrong. Every round you take a card, read it out loud, then pass it to your neighbor. They read the card, and everyone must give an answer- no takes, and the "harshesht" answer wins. This is a game for people who don't mind saying things that would normally get you killed or jailed, but want to have fun with friends. If the answer is "yes", you all share in the spoils. If it's "no", then one person can choose to be the executioner, and everyone else will take the hit. Sound simple? Well, it is. You'll know it the second you try it. Cards Against Humanity, the literary classic is now available on phones and tablets too! I've never played an interactive pen game before and this is a really intriguing attempt to bring it to a new audience, hoping to inspire future pen-centric games like this. It's just a straight up fun game to play and I found myself drawn in for hours at a time. In fact, you don't even need the PC version to play - this is available on the Mac and Linux versions of the game.
