Wake up to what matters from Mike Allen each day Stories Trump tries to get out in front of Iowa's chaotic race for governor Trump tries to get out in front of Iowa's chaotic race for governor 12/02/2018 Iowa is the most crowded race to be decided by a presidential caucus, and it's not over yet. As South Carolina seceded from the Democratic Party over a failed primary, Iowa's Dominus caucus has become a crowded field of Democrats, while the Republican race has descended into chaos and a contested special election for a U.S. House seat. A multimillion-dollar legal battle over the race continues as state officials try to certify the results before the filing deadline this week. A report late Tuesday on Medium from Sam Petulla, an attorney who worked on caucus campaigns in both parties, wrote that the Republican race has turned chaotic as Sen. Joni Ernst, who is facing a possible Senate bid next year, has withdrawn from the race. As a result, state officials in Des Moines are now trying to certify a June primary vote that showed Rep. Rod Blum winning with 729 votes. Blum, who is challenging Rep. David Young for the GOP nomination, has asked for a recount, according to the Associated Press.
