hit your Facebook Thursday Sep 27, 2012 at 3:10 AM I was going out for a drink and stumbled on a rule that Kings Cup is a drinking game. Maya McDowell Eric I was going out for a drink and stumbled on a rule that Kings Cup is a drinking game. This is a public service statement that begins by apologizing for my inability to plan for all your needs. The text proceeds to name eight play locations. Go the hell away. All of this works the same way as beer pong, only the cups can be any size and your beer is whatever size beer is. Meaning, you could start a game of Kings Cup with a fifth of vodka and a liter of, say, cranberry juice. Which strikes me as crazy except that it works. Anyway, I was going to try it and I was possibly going to get hammered, so you know what, I was totally going to play when I was sober. What kind of lame alcoholics play this when they are completely sober? At least I was going to make sure it was a pickle budget accident. Then I thought, "Well, I'm obviously going to play now." I was all ready to go and I thought, "There's clearly no way to play this, so let's do it and be done with it." Then you go to play and every single cup is bigger than all your fingers put together, except one. Thank God I didn't have to buy two or three cups. The only cool thing about it is I can put a Snapchat on the side of a cup. I don't think I have a good enough camera for that. But really it turns out that if you have eight cups - seven physical cups and one virtual cup - there is no way to play normally. There has to be some insane animal contortion to rearrange the positions of the cups or you are really screwed when one cup goes down. In other words, it is like beer pong for long sustained vomiting. So maybe you are all about drinking games and you aren't a huge fan of burping. This might be another one for you. Some people enjoy playing beer pong. Others enjoy not vomiting. This is a game for those people. So I was going to say go for it, but not only are
