This invention relates to a method of cleaning or purging a laundry dryer in which a quantity of laundry may be dryer discharged during a single drying cycle to reduce the total number of drying cycles required and, in one aspect, to provide a method and apparatus for assisting in the recycling of used dryer fluid in a laundry dryer. The uses of laundry dryers have been rapidly expanding in both residential and commercial settings. However, the drying capacity and energy consumption of such conventional dryers has not kept pace with the rapid increase in the use of such dryers. As a consequence, laundry dryers have become increasingly large and energy consumptive. While such increased size and power requirements
