Aqueous water-in-oil (W/O) microemulsions can be formed by mixing branched amphiphilic polymeric architectures with water-soluble components. Here, we show that star and hyperbranched polymers can be chemically modified to achieve phase behavior where aqueous microemulsions formed without a surfactant or cosurfactant. These systems were investigated with respect to structure, reactivity and phase behavior. These polymeric architectures offer many advantages over conventional surfactant microemulsions and conventional polymers that have been used to form W/O microemulsions. 6d1f23a050
