I've got a Laravel 6 application. One of the things that I'd like to do is perform some PHP-based data processing during a migration. It seems that I can't access the $migration object within the migration. From within the migration file, I can do: $profile = User::where('company_id', $company_id)->get() ... but I'm left with an object of type Illuminate\Database\Eloquent\Collection, instead of the User object I'd like to work with. Am I missing something? Is it possible to perform such a task in a Laravel migration file? A: According to the documentation, you can only do such things after creating your schema. So you should be able to: // Execute the migration as usual. $this->schema->create(); // Do your modifications here. $user = User::where('company id', $company id)->get(); // When everything's done, you can apply the migration: $this->schema->apply($ 6d1f23a050
