GameThe United States government is preparing a new emergency plan to deal with the impact of the coronavirus, which it has called COVID-19. The plans, revealed on Monday, envisage the use of equipment and healthcare resources at a level not seen since the US effort to deal with the end of World War II. The plans also envisage the killing of infected people, with the main purpose of saving hospital resources, and another of trying to maintain the “mainframe” of the economy in the hope of a swift recovery.

ADVERTISEMENT The emergency plan, called for by the president, involves the following:

- Stopping people from travelling from the US.
- Stopping US citizens from travelling to all but the most essential countries. - Not allowing an infected person to enter the US or being admitted to an American hospital. - Refusing to let a sick person fly home until they are well enough to pass the test for coronavirus. A public health emergency declaration has been made for the whole of the country, and the plan will be carried out by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) at the request of the president. There will be an immediate injunction for companies to take measures to care for workers.

ADVERTISEMENT “The Department of Health and Human Services
will establish and maintain a temporary
emergency health operations centre that will coordinate the administration of any necessary public health services, including in areas affected by this virus,” the plan says. The agency will, for example, open temporary clinics to treat people who are sick and consult with the affected. The government will also maintain all hospitals in the US. The plans will be brought into effect on Monday evening and remain in place for three weeks.

ADVERTISEMENT The plan does not suggest deploying nuclear weapons. The plan does not mention any impact on the service industry, air travel, federal government, military personnel or internet companies.

ADVERTISEMENT

However, it says that the government will take “all possible measures to mitigate the financial impact of this virus on the economy, and to support the financial
