A comparison was made of the contamination level of dental unit filters and pharyngeal specimens taken at a dental clinic with the same medical and dental equipment that had been used in previous studies to demonstrate the presence of bacterial pathogens in dental and medical equipment used in routine dental practice. Nineteen dental hygienists, 15 dentists, 15 dental technicians, and 14 physicians were sampled from the anterior nares, oral pharynx, and eye conjunctiva. No organisms were cultured from any part of the medical or dental equipment that was sampled. Oral flora was predominant in all pharyngeal specimens. This finding is consistent with the results of the previous studies. The dental equipment was the most heavily contaminated with aerobic bacteria. The findings of this study add additional evidence to the conclusion that dental unit filters are the most critical component of dental hygiene and infection control measures. Make Dreaming of Tomorrow Real For RPI Students Thu, 02/08/2013 -9:38am — Lori This spring, hundreds of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute students participated in a unique online course designed to give them a window to the world of entrepreneurship and offer them a better idea of what life will be like after graduation. RPI's Entrepreneurship and New Ventures Laboratory (ENVL) is a project based course designed for students who have little to no experience in the business world, and its goal is to provide them with a vision of what their future career or business might be like. Bjorn Aagaard, an ENVL instructor, says that their teaching style on the course is unique. While traditional courses focus on making students think about business, ENVL students are taught how to be one through design thinking workshops, a model that uses creativity and problem solving to create new solutions 6d1f23a050
