As word spread through the local high-school and elementary-school communities, a string of students began to attend the temple, lured by the halo of mystery surrounding the place, hoping that they could experience the same kind of mystical feelings they had when they first learned about Theravada Buddhism. The name of the temple, however, failed to stay secret. It was later revealed to be the Theravada temple in North America that was started by Lama Zopa Rinpoche in 1975. As Lama Zopa Rinpoche had said, the name of the temple is a secret and not meant to be known to other people. In this ancient time, before there was Theravada Buddhism in America, Lama Zopa Rinpoche said a single word of the dharma would be brought to America by founding Lama Zopa Rinpoche, a grand master of all Buddhas and all teachings. When anyone would speak about the dharma, they would share it to as many people as possible. Therefore, Lama Zopa Rinpoche promised that he would bring a single word of the dharma to America for future generations. Lama Zopa Rinpoche also said that people would gradually find their own lineage or lineage of teachers and practices in accordance with their innermost heart. The entire thought and intention was to give everyone an opportunity to practice Dharma in America. For this reason, the name of the temple is a secret. At that time, the founder and leader of the school was Lama Zopa Rinpoche. The monks who lived in the temple were all from Tibet and still are Tibetan lamas. In the past, only Lama Zopa Rinpoche would teach other people, including students. To protect the teachings from being distorted, it was the custom and practice of the monastery not to explain or comment on any of Lama Zopa Rinpoche's teachings to anyone outside of the monastery. The key to achieving enlightenment is the single-minded devotion to a spiritual guide who speaks the dharma precisely in accordance with your innermost heart and mind. That is why when people came into
