As you have seen from the attached figure, NSCP 2006..Bose Audio, which is expected to be acquired by Apple for about $25 billion, has unveiled a new model that's aimed at the increasingly popular trend of using wireless headphones for all three of your music, phone, and device needs. The Bose SoundLink Free wireless headphones — available for preorder today through the iTunes Store — answer a longstanding complaint about wireless headphones: you need to be close to your device to use them. That means turning on your phone, powering it on, or using the included remote. The SoundLink Free headphones do that without an additional charge to the phone; instead, they can transmit music from Apple's iOS devices via Bluetooth. The free version of the Bose SoundLink Free headphones is limited to one-pair listening per device. The sound quality is good; Bose says the quality is comparable to its $250 model, the SoundLink Iii. The biggest difference comes in the price — for under $150, you get two hands-free wireless headphones that can connect up to 50 feet away from your device. You can't have more than one pair of SoundLink Free at a time, however; the free version of the Bose SoundLink Free headphones is limited to one-pair listening per device. Bose has also unveiled the SoundLink Ili, its higher-end version that was unveiled at WWDC 2013. Like the free version, the SoundLink Ili pairs up to four people. At $300, it's the most expensive of the three, however, and also has a longer-range battery. In addition to the two previous models, Bose has also unveiled a Bluetooth 4.
