Palliative care (PC) is an important component of care throughout the life cycle of cancer. An estimated 40% of patients with cancer will receive PC, and this is most often in the final year of life. In thoracic surgery, PC is indicated for both the thoracic cancer patient and the noncancer patient. The latter includes patients with advanced lung disease (such as advanced emphysema or chronic obstructive pulmonary disease) who may develop complications related to their condition. PC also can address some issues of spiritual, psychologic, and interpersonal issues that arise during the care of patients with advanced disease. Within thoracic surgery, the cardiothoracic surgeon is often the primary PC provider, but collaboration with thoracic oncology colleagues is essential.US regulators to review Alzheimer's drug approval WASHINGTON: They don't know what they will do. But they will be looking into a pair of big Alzheimer's drug approvals and what happens to the approvals of drugs to treat other diseases when US President Donald Trump's administration assumes office in January. About 20 pharmaceutical companies are currently developing Alzheimer's treatments, and regulators have been willing to fast-track their approvals as the disease is relentless, causing debilitating loss of memory and other physical capabilities and growing in numbers as the average age of Americans rises. They have approved a slew of new drugs to treat the condition, without requiring a c6a93da74d
