Email WASHINGTON: The International Olympic Committee (IOC) on Tuesday elected former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg as its incoming president for the next four years. IOC Secretary General Edward Downie called Mr Bloomberg's victory at the 64th IOC Session in Lima, Peru, after a long battle which ended in a last-minute decision by the IOC Executive Board to abandon an election which would have required a secret ballot. "The IOC Executive Board and the IOC Technical Commission can congratulated Michael Bloomberg and his vice president Erik de Zeeuw," Mr Downie said. He also congratulated the 17 member National Olympic Committees for their efforts in electing the duo as the new IOC president and the first IOC vice president. Mr Bloomberg and Mr de Zeeuw will both take office on 1 September. The new IOC president will replace Jacques Rogge, whose tenure will expire at the end of this month. Mr Bloomberg is currently the CEO of the financial company Bloomberg L.P, which a native of New Jersey is chairman of the board of directors of the company, which owns the highly successful Bloomberg Businessweek magazine. Mr Bloomberg's first term as mayor was marked by his campaign to extend the subway to parts of the city not yet reached, a subway that made him a vocal critic of former NYC Mayor Rudy Giuliani. He also raised eyebrows as a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1999 and 2000, when he focused some of his campaign on reducing smoking and excessive drinking.1.
