This book is intended primarily for auto mechanics, but I hope it will be of interest to both electronics specialists working in workshops and maintenance specialists who monitor the condition of the car. End of the world The story was featured in film under the title How to save the world (1985), directed by Gerd Oswald. Setting The village of Gallus (a fictionalized version of Çakır Mountains region) is the location for most of the story, where all the eponymous children grow up. Plot Marcel and his friends are the three children of the village chief, who died unexpectedly. Marcel and his two friends Simon and Jean-Marie (the latter of whom is his identical twin) live in the strange old treehouse of the Chief, their only home. They never leave the village, but they are very attached to it, because the children's father was a good man who worked very hard, and a good husband and father. When they grow up, Simon is interested in his father's work, while Marcel is interested in magic and monsters. Marcel also likes making things and losing them, such as his teddy bear's head that flew away during a game, and his ball that got stuck in a tree during a hunt. The village is being prepared for the coming of the edge of the world. Marcel and his friends have to find a very important document called "The Book of Life," which will tell them if the world is going to end.
