the next day, guillermo and i meet in his garage. there, he shows me the instrument, and i can almost hear its potential. i ask him what hes thinking about, and he says its not that simple. he tells me hes worried about the sound, and hes already considering modifying the guitar slightly, to make the guitar more of a guitar, and less of a lute. hes thinking about adding a mahogany wedge at the bottom of the guitar to add volume. with this slight modification, he says, the guitar will sound more like a modern guitar, but retain the lute character. hes also worried about shipping costs and whether he should make the guitar light enough to be transported by plane. and so begins the story of one of the most remarkable guitars in history. some people, guillermo says, see the guitar as a chessboard. others see it as a piano. and then there are those who see it as a woman. the guitar is the mother of all human musical instruments. it is also a large, beautiful and powerful beast. it is, guillermo says, the most spiritual instrument in the world. to him, the guitar is a tool for transforming a musician, and a musician is simply a musical tool, an instrument that lets you create music and share it with others. it was a time of experimentation. the times were difficult, but the record companies werent paying much attention, which left musicians with an opportunity to forge their own path. the punk revolution led by the ramones and the sex pistols would soon be a force to be reckoned with. but in the late 1970s, the music scene was coming apart. although everyone hated the disco music then popular, few could deny its commercial success. the most successful band of the era was the eagles, who topped the charts with a collection of smooth, pop-oriented songs. but for many, this didnt have much to do with playing a guitar. and other groups like blondie and new york dolls werent even playing a guitar. instead, they were playing a new kind of guitar. the new wave groups, the ones who would shape the future of rock, were playing electric guitars in a new style. and the electric guitar was a powerful tool, providing both a cleaner sound and a more powerful dynamic range than a 12-string acoustic guitar could. by the 1980s, the guitar had more guts, and a lot more power than ever before.

peter will be making his own guitar to his specifications. the only thing we know for sure is that he wants a classical, 6-string instrument. if we were to make this guitar, we would need to order the wood, and it would be made in a few days. we hope that will be enough time for peter to play it and make sure it works with his playing style. he is going to want the guitar to be a small instrument with a slim neck, a long body, and a short scale length. he wants it to be comfortable, and he wants a good bridge that he can adjust for his playing needs. he wants an action that is easy to play and he does not want to change strings more than once a month. he does not want to spend a lot of money on the guitar, and he wants it to last, so he is thinking of buying a $300 instrument from someone who sells used guitars, or maybe a used instrument on ebay. with his own guitar peter will have full ownership, and that is the best way to ensure a lasting guitar. in contrast to peter, i grew up in the 70s in a time when makers were still proud of their instruments, but not so proud as to keep them under lock and key. i remember seeing my friends instruments in their garage and bedrooms and marveled at their craftsmanship and the materials they used. my father, a luthier, taught me the basics and gave me my first instrument. my father became a guitar tech in the early 70s, repairing and restoring electric and acoustic guitars for a number of artists, including grand funk railroad. he would see that his clients need was immediate, but he also had that desire to build something meaningful that could last forever. his shop was an extension of his studio and house where he made guitars. this is also the time he started getting involved in the rock and roll music business, where he met the members of styx and began playing with them. he also met stevie ray vaughan, who he worked with for a few years. my father made his name as the guy who made stevies hagstras for recording sessions. he then built a guitar for eric clapton, a guitar he still has, and a dean guitar for his godson. around the time i was finishing college, my father opened his first shop on staten island, where he had continued making guitars. he sold instruments, worked with the artists, repaired them, and lived in the very room where he had made the first guitar he ever owned, a flea. he eventually moved to westport, connecticut, where he lived in a small house, worked in a small shop, and played in a bar called the firehouse. he continued to make guitars, repair guitars, and play in the firehouse until his death in 2008. his wife, my mother, lived with him until she moved to the countryside in connecticut in 2000. 5ec8ef588b
