Recently, image-based displays have been implemented in a number of devices including hand-held computers, personal digital assistants (PDAs), and mobile phones. In order to interact with these devices, there is a need for a user to provide a number of inputs that is sufficient for the device to process the instruction. This may involve moving a cursor or selecting options to provide the input. In order to provide the necessary number of inputs for the user to interact with the device, a large number of keys must be used. In some applications, the number of keys required to be used in a single device would be impractical as a user would have to have a large number of keys within easy reach in order to be able to use the keys for input. Furthermore, in some environments, such as a vehicle, it may be impractical to have a large number of keys that can be easily activated within reach of a user in order to provide inputs to the device. 843 P.2d 428 (1992) Thomas ORR, Petitioner, v. GLENN FOODS, INC., Respondent. No. 92-0009. Supreme Court of Wyoming. October 19, 1992. *429 Thomas Orr, pro se. Raymond A. Pfeifer of Harris, Lubnau, Pfeifer & Brock, P.C., Casper, for respondent. Before URBIGKIT, C.J., and MACY, GOLDEN and TAYLOR, JJ. MACY, Justice. Thomas Orr (Orr) appeals from the district court's denial of his pro se motion for relief from a judgment. In his motion, Orr alleged that he received inadequate notice from respondent, Glenn Foods, Inc. (Glenn Foods), of a hearing on a judgment on a promissory note. The district court denied the motion because it was untimely. Orr seeks a writ of certiorari. We affirm. Orr and Glenn Foods entered into a joint venture to market peanut butter.
