The percentage of methane and other gaseous hydrocarbons in a gas stream may be measured using various gas analysis technologies. Some natural gas streams contain higher percentages of hydrocarbons having molecular weights greater than methane. Such streams are referred to as "liquefied natural gas" or "LNG". The conversion of natural gas into LNG typically involves heating the natural gas to a temperature of about −162° C., at which the natural gas will begin to form a liquid at atmospheric pressure.Q: Let
