Heart transplantation from donors of non-heart solid organs. The transplantation of hearts from non-heart donors has been evaluated in a number of centers. The definition of the optimal donor is still unclear. Besides major organ dysfunctions, the donor is usually dying from cancer or as a consequence of a prolonged cardiac disease. Brain death alone as a diagnosis of brain death is no longer accepted as a criterion for donor definition. The heart can be transplanted after a period of warm or cold ischemia. A major concern with such transplants is the possibility of a recurrent transplantation and a corresponding immunosuppression and the adverse effects of this. From the viewpoint of organ function preservation, the longest period of ischemia that can be tolerated is about 4 hours. Immunosuppressive regimens and induction schemes are based on the same principles as for heart transplantation from heart donors. Many centers have demonstrated that the rate of rejection is not increased in transplants of the heart from donors of non-heart solid organs. Because of the present lack of well-established recommendations for such transplants, the procedure should be regarded as experimental. The major effect of the immunosuppression should be aimed at the prevention of rejection of the graft. The balance between prevention of rejection and preservation of organ function in transplants from donors of non-heart solid organs should be further investigated.

Online and Mail Service FAQ General Tips How should I pack for a vacation? It's a good idea to pack light. You don't want to forget your toothbrush, your favorite pair of flip flops, or anything else you'll need when you arrive. To help make packing a little easier, take some time before you travel to go through your belongings, looking for anything you don't use or wear regularly. Take a digital camera to take pictures of all your clothes and other items, and then include them in a folder you can access when you are packing. Use this folder to group your belongings by category: loungewear, shirts, trousers, shoes, coats, and so on. How should I pack my luggage for a flight? Most people can keep their luggage organized with the right type of luggage or a luggage organizer. If you are a traveler with an odd number of bags, fold your clothes before packing them in your luggage. For example, if you have three luggage bags, fold one shirt, one pair of pants, one sweater, and one
