Resident Evil 4: Reborn [Steam].It is known that the etching rate of a pattern-formed layer (such as a photoresist layer) can be varied by irradiating the photoresist layer, through a mask, with a pattern of light, such as ultraviolet (UV) light. A cross section of a typical photoresist layer formed by known photolithographic techniques is shown in FIG. 1. The photoresist layer 10 is first applied over an underlying layer 12, such as a metal or semiconductor layer. The photoresist layer 10 is then exposed to patterned light 14. Light 14 penetrates the photoresist layer 10 only to a depth (h) proportional to the wavelength of the incident light. The light 14 impinges on the photoresist layer 10 as a pattern of light and dark areas 16 and 18. The portions of the photoresist layer 10 exposed to light are chemically altered and thus become soluble in a developer solution. The portions of the photoresist layer 10 not exposed to light do not chemically change and remain insoluble in the developer solution. Thus, the photoresist layer 10 can be selectively removed in a developer solution leaving a pattern (20) of resist material, such as a patterned layer of photoresist, which is defined by the patterned light and the pattern of dark areas 16 and 18. The unexposed portions of the underlying layer 12, such as the portion 16, can be selectively etched to create a pattern of a second layer (not shown) which is then formed on the patterned layer 20.
